Li Uncle listened carefully to the young man’s words, and then he began to tell him a story. “Many years ago,” he said, “there was a man who lived in this village. He was very poor, but he always believed that there must be something better out there for him.”

The old man continued his tale: “One day, this man decided to leave his village and go on a journey to find what he called ‘freedom.’ He traveled through mountains and rivers, crossed deserts and forests. Along the way, he encountered many challenges—dangers lurking in every corner of the world.”

“But no matter how difficult things got,” Li Uncle went on with his story, “the traveler never gave up. He kept moving forward until one day—after countless days of hardships—he finally found what he had been looking for all along.”

“What did you find?” the young man asked curiously. “I found freedom,” replied Li Uncle with a smile. “I realized that true freedom is not about wealth or status; it’s about being free from fear and doubt—free from any constraints that hold us back from living life as we truly desire.”
